

Our Cookie Policy

Cookies are small text files which contain a string of characters that can be placed on your computer or mobile device to uniquely identify your browser or device. They do not search your computer for information. They are harmless and cannot introduce viruses to your computer. Cookies tell our website if your computer or device has visited before, and are designed to help us improve our service, and the development of our website.

We use cookies to better understand how our site is being used, to help you navigate efficiently, to help remember relevant preferences and improve your browsing experience. We may also use cookies to help ensure our online marketing is more relevant to you. Cookies only store information that you provide. A cookie will only store personal information, such as your email addresses and contact details, if you have voluntarily provided it.

The following data may be gathered by cookies if you visit our website:

- The IP address of the requesting computer
- The date and duration of your visit
- The identification data of the browser and operating system type used
- The web pages you visited on our website
- The length of visits to certain pages and your page interactions
- The website from which you visited our website
- The documents you downloaded or videos viewed

Cookies themselves contain very little information other than the URL of our website. Because there is so little information, a cookie cannot be used to identify you by name or acquire any personal information. The table below explains the cookies we use and why.
